

GIJ08

Luuk Sengers (42) is a freelance investigative reporter and journalism lecturer. Luuk is co-founder of the first European investigative reporters network (IRENE) and secretary of the Dutch-Flemish Association of Investigative Reporters (VVOJ).

Brett Horner is deputy news editor in the Daily Dispatch. There he became part of the team that exposed the alarming number of stillbirths at the Frere Hospital, which led to the dismissal of the deputy health minister in South Africa.

Nils Mulvad is partner in Kaas & Mulvad and assistant professor at The Danish School of Journalism. In 2006 he was awarded European Journalist of the Year for this work and his work on access to data.

Preben Aavitsland is the director of Division of Infectious Disease Control at the National Institute of Public Health in Norway. He is an MD, and has been in charge of the investigation of several infectious outbreaks in Norway including handling the media pressure.

Stanimir Vaglenov works for "24 chasa" daily - the second biggest in Bulgaria. In September 2003 he published the first Bulgarian book with journalistic investigations. In April 2007 he founded Bulgarian Investigative Journalism Center.

Raj Bairoliya is chartered accountant and managing director of FTI Forensic Accounting, one of the leading City firms specialising in this type of investigation. The company is retained by law enforcement and regulatory agencies.

Philip Lote, born, 1972, is a British-Norwegian and a Foreign Correspondent with the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation, NRK. He has worked on Asia since 1994.

Dr. Yao Xiaoling was researcher at Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS) before she came to Norway. Her academic interest is Chinese development and democratisation.

David Banisar is Director of the Freedom of Information Project of Privacy International in London. He has worked in the field of information policy for seventeen years and is the author of several books.

Mark Hunter is the only person to have won awards from Investigative Reporters and Editors for both his journalism and his research on journalism, and has several other journalism awards. Hunter is a founding member of the Global Investigative Journalism Network.

Kjersti Knudssøn has worked for the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation since 1993, first as a journalist and later news editor. Since 2002 Kjersti has worked in the documentary department producing several investigative documentaries.

Synnøve Bakke has worked for the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation in Bergen and Trondheim since 1992. Synnøve has worked as a production manager and production coordinator for many years and has only recently switched to the journalistic profession.

Tommy Kaas has a background in print journalism. He was a co-founder of FCJ, the Organisation for Computer-Assisted Reporting, and the Danish International Centre for Analytical Reporting. With Nils Mulvad he now runs "Kaas & Mulvad - Research and analysis".

Tuomo Pietiläinen works as a reporter for Finland's largest daily Helsingin Sanomat. He among many other investigative projects revealed how telecom operator Sonera tried to trace journalists' phone calls. For this he won the Bonnier's Big Journalistic Award 2003 together with Anssi Miettinen.

Paul Myers joined the BBC in 1995 as a news information researcher. Having worked with computers since 1976, Paul has successfully introduced many technical tools into the world of journalism. He has also helped shape BBC editorial policy on Internet research.

Paul Cristian Radu co-founded the Romanian Center for Investigative Journalism (RCIJ). He won a 2004 Knight International Press Fellowship Award and was the coordinator of a cross-border investigative project that won the 2007 Global Shining Light award.

Sunday Dare is a prize winning former general editor of Nigeria's weekly newsmagazines, The News and Tempo. He is a member of the International Consortium of Investigative Journalism, ICIJ for about a decade.

Charles Lewis is executive editor of the Investigative Reporting Workshop at American University and the president of the Fund for Independence in Journalism in Washington, D.C. In 1998 Lewis was awarded a MacArthur Fellowship and the PEN USA First Amendment award in 2004.

Harald Henden (47) is a photojournalist in Verdens Gang (VG), Norway. He has covered wars, crises and catastrophes since the Gulf-war in 1991. His pictures have won several Norwegian and International prizes. In 2004 he received the Norwegian award for outstanding journalism.

Fredrik Græsvik (41) is a Foreign Correspondent in TV2, Norway. He has specialised on the situation in the Middle-East, and has covered wars, crises and catastrophes since the war in Rwanda in 1994.

Nafeez Mosaddeq Ahmed is Executive Director of the Institute for Policy Research & Development (IPRD) in London. He is now a lecturer at different universities.

Ståle de Lange Kofoed (42) is an associate director at the Norwegian Institute of Journalism where he works with online research, information management and investigative methods.

André Verløy (36) is an associate director at the Norwegian Institute of Journalism where he works with online research, information management and investigative methods.

Espen Andersen (34) works as researcher and web producer for the investigative documentary programme "Brennpunkt" at the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation.

Jennifer LaFleur is director of computer-assisted reporting for ProPublica, a non-profit newsroom producing journalism in the public interest. She was the first national training director for Investigative Reporters and Editors.

Trond Sundnes is a finance reporter with the Norwegian Business Daily (Dagens Næringsliv). He won the Norwegian prize for investigative journalism (SKUP) in 2001.

Paul Cristian Radu works through the Romanian Center for Investigative Journalism (RCIJ). He won a 2004 Knight International Press Fellowship Award and was the coordinator of a cross-border investigative project that won the 2007 Global Shining Light award.